Know! Positive Relationships Build Character

One of the greatest gifts you can give your children cannot be bought online or in-store. While it is not likely to be on their holiday wish list, this gift is likely to bring your children greater happiness with lifelong benefits. We are talking the gift of positive relationships and character development.

In 2013, Search Institute began a multiyear project based on their creation of the Developmental Relationships Framework, which examines the close connections in children's lives - parents, peers, mentors, teachers and other caring adults - and the impact they have on character development. Some key aspects learned thus far is that these significant relationships in a child's life are associated with their motivation to learn and take personal responsibility for their actions. Also, youth with strong, positive relationships are shown to be more resilient when faced with stress and trauma - which can otherwise lead to risky and dangerous behavioral coping strategies (like drinking, smoking and using other drugs).

The idea behind the Developmental Relationships Framework is to consistently surround young people with positive, supportive relationships to help them thrive; in their families, schools, programs and neighborhoods.

Search Institute provides the following five fundamental elements as part of the relationship-strengthening framework and shares specifics on how parents, teachers, coaches, etc. can act on them:

- 1. Express Care: Show me that I matter to you
2. Challenge Growth: Push me to keep getting better
3. Provide Support: Help me complete tasks and achieve goals
4. Share Power: Treat me with respect and give me a say

5. Expand Possibilities: Connect me with people and places that broaden my world

Inspire me to see possibilities for my future; Expose me to new ideas, people, experiences and places; Connect me with more people who can help me develop and thrive

A young person with a sense of purpose, self-worth and self-respect, who feels loved and supported, is much more likely to experience success in school and work, care about their community, and excel in other areas of life. So as you're making your lists and checking them twice this holiday season, keep the above list in mind, as it promises to be the gift that keeps on giving.
